COLORED PICTURES MADE BY CAMERA

Washington Photographer Demonstrates Lumiere Process to Artists.

Expense of the Plates Makes Experiments Almost Prohibitive.

Portraits in the colors of nature by photography are now possible. Photographic invention has at last solved the problem which for fifty years has

It has been the good fortune of W. of the will. H. Towles, a Washington photographer, to demonstrate the possibility of making portraits by the Lumiere process. Club, which has been much interested ing with her. in the subject of color photography.

The portraits secured by Mr. Towles have the fidelity in drawing customary to photographs. In addition to correct drawing they give color accurate in tone, in all of the known colors, with the exception of yellow. This color is reproduced as yellow, but not with the same fidelity common to other colors.

Correct Exposure Difficult.

The best of the three photographs shown at the Camera Club was a por trait of a young lady attired in a greet gown. The superior quality of this por trait was not due to the color of the gown, but to the fact that the photograph was correctly timed. Correct exposure is the most necessary and at the same time the most difficult feature of this new art.

Other examples showed excellent color tones. In one the delicate colors of the amethyst, the emerald, and the pure quality of the diamond were discernable in articles of jewelry worn by the model.

The photographs were upon glass,

The photographs were upon glass, commonly known as transparencies, and could only be inspected by transmitted light. The Lumiere photographic plates upon which these portraits were made consist of a glass covered with an adhesive emulsion upon which a coating of starch grains dyed with colors of violet, green, and red, is placed. The grains did not overlap each other, and the intervening spaces were filled with carbon. On this coating a gelatine emulsion, sensitive to all colors was placed, and the plate was placed in the camera with the glass side toward the lens. Development consisted of several chemical treatments of the plate, requiring about twenty-five minutes in all.

Expense Prohibitive.

The expense of the plate is almost prohibitive, as $15 a dozen for the 5x7 size, necessary developer for a dozen plates at a cost of about $2, and a special ray filter costing many times of one or more than the customary filter, makes Hickory. photography of this kind an expensive experiment. It is at present largely ex-experiment. It is at present largely experimental and will remain so until such a knowledge of the plates as will enable the photographer to estimate the time of exposure has been obtained. With a rapid portrait lens, in a well-lighted studio, on a bright day, it is possible to make fully timed photographs with an exposure of sixty seconds. The possibilities of this little-known Lumiere process are as yet but imperfectly realized. When it is remembered that the discoveries of Daguerre gave but little promise at the first that portraiture would be possible by this process, it is easy to understand how the romarkable discovery of Lumiere, yet in its infancy, opens as great a field for color as did the earlier discovery for monochrome.

The estate of Capt, John M. Clapp, Through an unexpected visit of Mrs. Mary Wilkerson, of New York, to Washington, it was learned today that her daughter, Miss Estell Wilkerson, was married here to Jesse R. Spates, of Georgetown, October 21.

Miss Wilkerson left the family home in New York October 20 and came to Washington ostensibly for the purpose of visiting friends. At the station she was met by Mr. Spates, who fell in love with the strikingly handsome brunette while she was playing in a musical comedy company. They took a train to a suburb of Washington and were married the day of her arrival in the city. Since their wedding they have been living at Thirty-fourth and P streets, Georgetown. It was planned by the coule to invite Mrs. Wilkerson to the house early in February and announce the marriage, but she came to the city entirely inexpected yesterday and surprised her daughter and son-i-law.
